

Basel/Zurich, December 11th 2023

Two esteemed Swiss digital health experts, docjo and Evoleen, are joining forces to advance digital solutions for the most widespread chronic diseases.

Swiss Software as Medical device (SaMD) company docjo, a recent spin-off from internationally multi-awarded Swiss/Israeli digital health platform provider docdok.health, announced today the onboarding of the leading Swiss healthcare start-up builder and digital health expert Evoleen as co-founder.

Evoleen will be represented at the board of directors level by Marcel Wüthrich, Chief Business Development and Commercial Officer at Evoleen, and former senior commercial business executive at Roche Diagnostics. He will complete docjo's founding team, consisting of Dr. Ulrich Mühlner, former global head of corporate strategy and healthtech partnerships at Swiss pharma giant Novartis, and Dr. Yves Nordmann, former co-founder of digital health trailblazer Welldoc in the US and Oviva in Europe. This synergistic and experienced leadership team has the clear goal to establish docjo amongst the leaders in the emerging digital therapeutics markets.

docjo, headquartered at the Switzerland Innovation Park Basel (Novartis Campus), is utilizing a platform and portfolio approach, similar to biotech companies, with a pipeline of digital solutions for several of the most prevalent chronic diseases. Two apps have been already CE-certified, one targeting prediabetes and the other one asthma, and are now being prepared for market entry. The solutions have been developed based on years-long research and clinical activities, including insights and clinical evidence derived from partnerships with University Hospital Zurich and digital health accelerators like ARC at Sheba Medical Center in Tel Aviv, and cooperations with pharma partners like AstraZeneca. With a first focus on the German market, an important co-development and distribution partnership could be signed with one of the leading German physician organizations.

“We have been looking for a co-shaper, technology, and go-to-market partner who shares our passion for supporting patients in need with proven digital health solutions and is used to work in a highly regulated environment, while still performing in an agile way,” said Ulrich Mühlner, CEO of docjo. “With Evoleen, we found all of this in one entity, which is pretty rare.”

Evoleen's goal is to co-create digital healthcare opportunities with strong partners and build and scale these ventures. “We are very excited to join such an experienced founding team to fully leverage our expertise in the digital health space while living our credo ‘making digital healthcare happen’. Together, we will make a positive impact in digital health”, explains Marcel Wüthrich, Chief Commercial & Business Development Officer at Evoleen.

About Evoleen

Evoleen is a disruptive digital healthcare company builder, accelerating, and enhancing digital health and smart medical device business opportunities. With a unique co-creation approach, Evoleen drives innovative solutions together with big corporations, NGO's, other health partners and offers and shares knowledge in all relevant fields - covering all competencies of Customer Insight, R&D, Quality Management & Regulatory Affairs, ICT, and Operations - to designing and developing digital health businesses. It also offers its vast experience in software development and Quality & Regulatory consulting to other Healthtech start-ups and companies www.evoleen.com.

About docjo

docjo, a recent spin-off of internationally multi-awarded Swiss/Israeli digital health platform provider docdok.health, is a Software as Medical Device company, headquartered at the Switzerland Innovation Park in Basel (Novartis Campus). The company is utilizing a platform and portfolio approach, similar to biotech companies, with a pipeline of digital solutions for several of the most prevalent chronic diseases. www.docjo.health